Field of the Invention This invention relates to a cyclic die-stacking press including a multiple die stacking assembly, in which upper and lower die stacks are stacked and secured to each other. 2. Description of the Prior Art A conventional die-stacking press includes a multiple die stack arrangement with a multiple die stack, that is formed of multiple upper and lower die stacks stacked and secured to each other. The upper die stack has upper dies arranged in a stack and secured to each other at their opposed surfaces. The lower die stack has lower dies arranged in a stack and secured to each other at their opposed surfaces. Each of the upper and lower die stacks has a large number of dies arranged in a row. The multiple die stack arrangement is provided with a runner arranged on the opposed surfaces of the upper and lower die stacks. The dies are clamped between the upper and lower dies by the runner, and accommodated in a carrier. The dies are then heated so as to harden a resin material thereof, and thereafter the upper and lower die stacks are unloaded and stacked. However, the conventional die-stacking press is disadvantageous in that it is very difficult to assemble the upper and lower die stacks in a carrier. Furthermore, it is not only difficult to assemble the upper and lower die stacks in a carrier, but also it is very difficult to unload the dies from the carrier.
