In the autumn of 1979, a good friend of mine introduced me to John Passariello, a young photographer in San Francisco. John had a new business called Images By John in Japantown, and that was where the meeting took place. Ever since then, I have been working with his images, sometimes photographing the same events twice or three times. I have used his images to stock layouts for books, magazine articles, and products with companies such as Sassy, Vogue, and The New York Times Magazine. In the past years, I have worked with John on a number of books, including: I also use his family photographs to stock articles in The Best Dressed, Shoppers, Dressings, and Cleaning. I love John's parents, but I also like their dogs, and the ones with collies and terriers have become a regular part of our family photos. With sweet Chloe and lovely Piper, we have had wonderful photos that have been used in advertising, layouts, and magazine stories for the last 20 years. I have also given a number of lectures at a number of locations, and John has been by my side. We have made a number of appearances as a team on the Discovery Channel's "Street Food America," Food Network's "Food Craving," and the Travel Channel's "Good Eats." We have worked together numerous times on TV, in books, and in magazines. I admire John's creativity, his ability to capture the magic of a memory, his skills as a storyteller, and his ability to get even the most reluctant subject to smile. John Passariello started in photography as a teenager, when his father gave him his first camera. He wrote in an interview: "My dad was away a lot in sales, so my mom made me work in their restaurant most summers. The owners allowed me to take photographs of events there. That's
