Hopes, delays, and gotchas: nursing students' experiences with using the automated Clinical Information System for Nursing Students. The Automated Clinical Information System for Nursing Students (ACISS) was intended to standardize education, improve critical thinking, and foster independent decision-making. This is a qualitative study on nursing students' experiences with the software and their views on its use in both the classroom and clinical setting. We conducted a qualitative study to explore nursing students' experiences with the ACISS. Six focus group interviews were conducted with 37 nursing students. The interviews were conducted at the end of semester in order to assess students' attitudes toward ACISS and for the purpose of understanding nursing students' experiences with the software. In addition to qualitative data, a quantitative instrument was administered to gather data about the students' experiences with the ACISS. The ACISS-Visual cannot be more than an aide, it can only complement teachers and students. ACISS has not grown into the tool that was intended. The most important outcomes of using the ACISS are that it has created a high level of understanding about the nursing process and new ways of thinking. The ACISS has become an important part of the experience of learning how to use nurses' office.

The game was a classic where a late goal decided the outcome and the match was refereed by a bloke who decided to blow the final whistle at full time. I wasn't at the ground but I managed to catch some interviews from the game on the BBC's Final Score (BBC Radio 2) podcast. SoundCloud also has a clip of the match, and it
